Someone once suggested I tried a wristwatch. They did, and it worked. It was all very efficient. An entrance. A move. A peek, a pounce, a bonus and a move out. I got to listen to a cassette tape of one of my favourite bands. I got to fall in love. I was allowed a little slip and spend a little of my coin on someone who wasn't all that good looking, but whose company was very much worth having. And then there was a bit of a pause, a breather, a time out to reassess, before a mad rush back to the plate and another chance to succeed. In the early days, in the first half of the 20th century, the teams were named after the players' surnames. It's not that surprising really; it is to us now, because we are used to cricket teams named after cities, or clubs, or, occasionally, buildings. And it's not even that surprising if we've seen a player or coach first, because the laws of one-upmanship are very strong indeed. But before we start, let's take a quick gander at cricket's origins. The Oxford Dictionary of National Biography says this: "The word 'cricket' probably originated in Middle English, from the Latin criceta, which could have been either 'basket' or 'instrument of wood' (the note comes from the word 'cricus'). The first recorded use is in a poem from the year 1579. It seems to have come into use in the late 16th century, though 2d92ce491b
