While preparing to leave my current job for another, I was asked about my favorite foods. When I said "chocolate" and "cherries", I was told that the two weren't related. Was this an English-Australian thing, or is this normal English usage? A: The word 'chocolate' comes from the Roman word 'chocolatum', which is the diminutive form of the Latin word chocolatus, meaning 'small, pointy or prickly'. The English word 'chocolate' was first recorded in 1660, but appears to have emerged around 1550 from the indigenous languages of the 'northeast area': Algonquian _chocócala, cauco_; Biloxi (or Choctaw): _chokócochi_; Chickasaw (or Choctaw): _chokóc'olokó_ Hialeahi (or Haudenosaunee): _chokác-au-l'wéi
