It is the second book in the Raja raj series, being followed by Rajnani bai and preceding. Both these novels are about the struggle of a man against his own preconceived notions of caste and religious beliefs. It was published in 1949. According to the author, Rajnani Bai and Malela Jeev can be read as two parts of the same novel. Plot summary The story begins with the introduction of Sheesh Mahadev, the hero of the story. Sheesh, who lives in the city of Riya, is a wealthy and indulged young man. He has a "high class" lifestyle, wears western clothes, drives his own car and lives in a marble mansion with two servants and a maid. In his youth he used to get into fights for the sake of pleasure, but then realized the pointlessness of fighting and began to adopt the Brahmanical concept of non-violence. He can speak Hindi, English and Urdu, but he considers himself a Gujarati. The story then shifts to Riya, the village in which Sheesh lives. Riya is a small village in the Kathiawar district of Gujarat, with an estimated population of around four thousand. A number of incidents, all of them involving Sheesh's character, gradually take place. A local Brahmin, Neelabh, sees an accident in which Sheesh's car kills a man in the middle of the road. He gets angry at Sheesh for his privilege, and he says that Sheesh does not care for the village since he drives around in his car and does not get involved in the matters of the village. He further questions Sheesh's morals when Sheesh refuses to recognize that an accident had occurred. Sheesh meets a young girl, Maruti, a part of the Maheshwar colony, when he comes to pick up a bus for Riya. Maruti is being teased by her brother, Nana, who is disrespectful towards women. Sheesh understands Maruti's distress, and he tries to
