Join Our Newsletter The numbers are in from Target's holiday season, and they are staggering. On Black Friday, Target's website received more than 10 million visits. This is a 25% increase in traffic from the same holiday last year. In addition to the website, the company had three mobile apps downloaded almost a million times, up 72% from last year. Target, of course, is not alone in this. We all saw the same success when retailers opened their doors on Thanksgiving. Why are retailers so excited about the returns from Black Friday? Consumers across the country were planning their Thanksgiving Day treks to the stores for weeks, and stores wanted to get a head start to enjoy the biggest sales day of the year. Consumers were planning their shopping trips well in advance, and if they couldn't do it on Black Friday, they would do it on the next day. The New Black Friday, What's Next? As far as retailers are concerned, the end of Black Friday is just beginning. Today, retailers are gearing up for the next sales day and the industry will look to extend the shopping frenzy into Cyber Monday. Why do consumers respond so well to the holiday shopping season? First, consumers spend a lot of time planning their shopping trips. It's just part of the American psyche to get the best deals on holiday shopping, and stores know that. Second, retailers, like Target, have invested in sophisticated technology that allows them to capture shopping patterns on a far more granular level than they did a year ago. It's not just about traffic. Target, for example, can look at consumers' shopping patterns on a per day or per product basis. This gives retailers a very clear understanding of who's on the prowl for what, and where, giving them the information they need to improve their promotions and timing. Target has three apps available on the App Store and Google Play: the mobile web, Target Finder (location-based shopping), and Facebook Deals. 2d92ce491b
