References Category:Diagnostic software Category:SCSICigarette smoking and the prevalence of asthma: findings from the American Health and Nutrition Survey. Cigarette smoking is an established risk factor for asthma, but the nature of this association is unclear. We examined the relationship between cigarette smoking and asthma in a cross-sectional analysis of data from the US National Health and Nutrition Examination Surveys (NHANES). Participants were stratified by age and gender and responses to questions on cigarette smoking were used to classify respondents into three groups: current, former, and never smokers. The NHANES data set included 5334 current smokers, 12,144 former smokers, and 695,967 never smokers. The prevalence of physician-diagnosed asthma was higher in current smokers than in former or never smokers, and the difference between the former and never smoker groups was statistically significant (pQ: How do I extract only one of the key of a multiplet:y.tuple in a column in Pandas?
