Osteosarcoma (OS) is the most common primary bone malignancy with an annual incidence of approximately 4/million and occurs most often in children and young adults ([@bb0025]). It is notoriously difficult to treat, with an overall survival rate of 30% and survival rates of 15% to 30% after 5 years ([@bb0035]). There have been significant improvements in treatment of OS, however, responses to chemotherapy are highly variable, with relapse rates of 25% to 80% ([@bb0015]). Most patients with localized disease are treated with curative surgical resection, but for those with more advanced disease, chemotherapy, radiotherapy, and/or biologic therapy is often utilized ([@bb0045]). The OS oncogene, fos, was identified as a common breakpoint site in OS patients and encodes a transcription factor termed c-fos ([@bb0005]). A region on chromosome 14q11.2 that was consistently associated with translocations in OS was later found to contain a 2492c491b
