Bill was diagnosed with dementia last year and was admitted to hospital after a fall at his home in Worcester, Oxfordshire. He died on Monday, August 20. Bill was the creator of the dating show Perfect Match and, together with his wife Gail, regularly hosted the show for more than 30 years. It was broadcast on Channel 4, ITV and the now defunct CITV and it launched after an incredible 618 calls from couples seeking advice and love. Bill told us last year how he set up his business when he was just 18 years old after receiving a job offer from the Daily Mail. He had won a scholarship to Oxford University, but instead of becoming a scholar, he started his career as a journalist. He said: “The job I was offered was to go to the Daily Mail in Fleet Street, write stories and become a journalist. “I became a housemaster at Westminster School. I taught Latin and Greek and I was always working out what to do with my life.” He took the job at the Mail, but he and his wife Gail, the daughter of a vicar, began dating while he was a reporter. They married and they continued their relationship as a couple, both working, living and raising a family in the north London area. Bill explained: “At that time, it was really uncommon for women to work. “I had lots of female friends who wanted to work but would get fired. The men who were married didn’t usually want to be home to bring up their children.” He continued: “After a few years, Gail was pregnant and she was demobbed from the army. 2d92ce491b
