While SU Podium is good .Q: Firebase stored data when app closed I have read a lot of questions and answers about it but can't find a good answer for my specific situation. I am developing an android application. I have a database in firebase realtime database. How can I maintain the data in that database when the app is closed? Should I save the data in android data storage or shared preferences? or I am thinking of saving it in the realtime db? A: The Firebase Realtime Database is intended to be a 'realtime' database. When your application starts you should start synchronizing your data to the realtime database. Every time you update your local database you should send that data to the server and then write it back to the realtime database. If you change your mind about what you want to store on Android you can use the Storage API, or Local Datastore. A class of proteins from the inner membrane of mitochondria, called penaeidins, are composed of a common N-terminal leader sequence that confers both targeting and resistance to high pore-forming activity. We have determined the N-terminal amino acid sequence of human penaeidin (Hp-PC) that is essentially homologous to the leader peptides of Hp-PC from Atlantic salmon (Sa-PC) and squid pen (Qp-PC) and as orthologous to the leader sequences of PC in the European lobster (Ep-PC) and the Antarctic krill (Pm-PC) that are collectively termed Beryllin (B-PC). The sequence data confirm that the leader sequence of PC is common to all PC's. The gene (PENH1) for Hp-PC is located on human chromosome 6 and displays a multi-level expression pattern suggesting differential regulation. A 4 kb cDNA encoding Hp-PC has been isolated. The predicted amino acid sequence of Hp-PC is identical to that of Sa
