Meaning the 'open strings' in Mandarin, the Chinese are known for their highly musical instruments. More so than most, the Chinese truly have their own style, and this collection is an exercise in that. Aulan (pronounced "Aw-Laan") is another of China's wind instruments, an ancient flute made from bamboo. It is hollow and is played with an embouchure similar to that of a panpipe, although the Aulan is more melodic. Chinese are sometimes called "the people of music". They have an array of instruments for the most part being simple and well-made. Among those is the Aulan. The Aulan comes in a few different styles and tones, so there are many different Aulans, not just one "standard". f3e1b3768c
