Association of the Fyn tyrosine kinase gene with schizophrenia in a Mexican population. Fyn is an intracellular tyrosine kinase involved in the transduction of multiple growth-factor receptors and also in regulating gene expression. It has been implicated in regulating synaptic plasticity, neuron development, and maintenance of long-term potentiation (LTP). The gene is located in 22q11.23, a region that contains a few genetic polymorphisms strongly associated with schizophrenia in different populations. A role for Fyn in the pathogenesis of schizophrenia has been hypothesized based on molecular and pharmacological evidence. In this study, we investigated the role of Fyn in the pathogenesis of schizophrenia in a Mexican population. The allelic frequencies of 22 polymorphisms in the Fyn gene were compared in 75 Mexican subjects with schizophrenia and 79 healthy controls using logistic regression analysis. The results indicated an association of the Fyn gene with schizophrenia ( $P = 0.003$ ). This association remained significant after correcting for multiple testing. Given the promising results from previous work, further studies in other populations are needed to replicate this association. This study also provides additional evidence for the role of the Fyn gene in the pathogenesis of schizophrenia.

Altered plasma creatine kinase activity in patients with ventricular tachycardia. Patients with ventricular tachycardia (VT) have been shown to have altered levels of brain natriuretic peptide. As creatine kinase (CK) is synthesized within the myocardium, it is possible that CK might also be altered in the setting of myocardial ischemia. To examine the hypothesis that CK is altered in patients with VT, we measured CK and CK-MB activity in the plasma of patients with VT due to coronary artery disease and in normal volunteers. Thirty-eight patients (32 men, 6 women; mean  $\pm$ SD age,  $57.6 \pm 9.9$  years) and 29 normal volunteers (24 men, 5 women; mean age,  $41.9 \pm 10.7$  years) were studied. Blood was obtained from the radial artery after a 20-minute rest. Plasma CK and CK-MB activity was measured by standard laboratory methods. Values were compared between groups
