Dwyer County Courthouse The Dwyer County Courthouse, located at 500 Grand Central in Hillsboro, Ohio, is the courthouse serving the county of Dwyer, Ohio. The building is a Classical Revival-style structure with stone and brick trim. Completed in 1921, it was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1996. The building is ten bays wide and one-story. It has large windows on two sides, which are divided from the center by a narrow projecting bay that includes an entrance portico. The bays are grouped in a U-shaped plan that is broken by the projecting bay; the center room is used for county offices. The building was constructed in 1921 as the Dwyer Courthouse, and was built as a Works Progress Administration project. It was designed by Portland architects G.W. Bell and R.O. Kinsey. The Hall-Harris Company was the contractor. In 1983, the interior was refurbished by the County and the Ohio Preservation Resource Center, following a fire. The original tile floors and Victorian-era murals were restored. The courthouse was named for Timothy J. Dwyer, a state senator and the county's first auditor. References

According to documents filed in the Case Court, on Nov. 15, Hillsboro police were dispatched to a residence on the 1000 block of West Blvd. in response to a report of a domestic disturbance. When officers arrived, they found a large group of teenagers present and found that the music was so loud, one of the officers went to his squad car to listen for a noise check. “The officers heard the music and waited for approximately 20 minutes for the music to fade out,” states the report. “When the music finally stopped, they walked back to the house where they found many teens partying loudly. (The teens) appeared intoxicated and were yelling at each other.” Officers told the teens to “turn down their music or be subjected to arrest,” according to the report, but further warning was not taken. Police issued tickets to a woman, 20, and a man, 22, for loud music. On Dec. 1, according to court documents, the man and his girlfriend, a 27-year-old Hillsboro woman, were cited for being under the influence of drugs for a second time. Court documents indicated the man was driving with his girlfriend when they were pulled over by police. According to the police report, officers approached the couple and asked to see the man’s identification, which he did not have with him. A driver’s license was located in the driver’s side cup holder and told police the man was not the owner of the vehicle. “The officer then made the determination that the man was driving under the influence of 3ef4e8ef8d
