A: No, they don't. FileReader.read will read from a given file. RandomAccessFile.read will read from the RandomAccessFile instance directly. A: If you are looking to do things in parallel, just use a FileReader. If you are looking to do things in succession, use a RandomAccessFile. A: FileReader is simply a wrapper around java.io.Reader, while RandomAccessFile is simply a wrapper around java.io.RandomAccessInputStream. This means they can each do different things. You will want to use a FileReader to read from a local file, and a RandomAccessFile to read from a file on the network. So if you're looking for "just the same as reading from a file", the answer is "Yes".
