A: Your question is rather subjective but needs to be narrowed down to provide an answer that is either accepted or an answer that best captures the desired end result. Please provide us with a more specific case for us to work with. This case has been edited to remove the "not a reference to a class or function" part of your question. Please delete the remainder of the post as it is misleading.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image processing apparatus, method and a computer-readable recording medium.

2. Description of the Related Art In the recent years, the technology of processing an image as a 3-dimensional object or a stereoscopic image has been proposed. The proposed technology extracts a contour of a subject image included in a digital image. A contour line of the contour is extracted in an accurate manner with respect to the contour. By doing so, it is expected to obtain information concerning the object in the digital image. In the case where there are a plurality of photographed subjects, as a method of analyzing a captured image, it is effective to apply a mean (average) value of a value of an attribute such as color to an area of a predetermined width for the respective subjects. By doing so, the analysis for every subject is executed with a small processing load. Further, it is expected to obtain a mean value of values of a predetermined attribute within a wide range of an area with respect to every subject. Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2002-127775 discusses a method of dividing the image into a plurality of areas and obtaining a mean value of an attribute for each area. When the image analysis is applied to the image taken under the above-described circumstances, the method described in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2002-127775 raises a problem of an increase in a processing load for the analysis. For example, when the images of the respective subjects are taken in a wide range of each of color and luminance, an enormous number of values must be calculated.
