El economista e historiador Guglielmo Mijailov. Analyzes changes taking place in the Russian capitalist republic of the new industrial revolution, founded in Petrograd in April 1917. By the end of 1918, three years after its foundation, it had industrial production twice the size of the United States, with 20 percent of the world's steel capacity and 30 percent of the world's coal. The book was translated into English in 1921 under the title "Industrial Revolution in Russia," and into German in 1923, as Die russischen Fabrikationen. This was the book that enthralled Lenin and spelled the end of the Revolution. According to Mijailov, the Revolution, directed by the soviets and proletariat, is defeated by the bourgeoisie, which has stolen the Revolution from the workers. Despite its defeat in its initial Revolutionary period, Mijailov considers that the Revolution is still proceeding, because the bourgeoisie and the proletariat are still struggling for final victory. Mijailov dealt in detail with the events of the years of struggle that culminated in the October Revolution and the publication of the book. He developed his views on the meaning of the Revolution in the context of its historical-philosophical approach. On its foundation, Mijailov sees the Revolution as a victory of the proletariat and the working class, where the proletariat had become the authentic political class. The workers, by having taken the power from the bourgeoisie, had become the new revolutionary class. These ideas were elaborated in the book with texts that were anti-Leninist and anti-revolutionary, and for this reason were censored. The book was a source of concern for the first Soviet leaders and was denounced by Leon Trotsky, who accused Mijailov of analyzing objectively the causes of the Revolution and not of postulating an ideology. He responds to this criticism by saying that what is taken in political judgment may be analyzed philosophically as the result of a combination of historical, economic, and political factors that determine the course of social phenomena. The Risorgimento is the name given to the movement of the Italian bourgeoisie toward political and social power in the period of Italian unification. It is a French term, derived from Italy but which fits perfectly the Mijailov analysis. Mijailov deals with the period of Italian unification in relation to the theory of the Italian Risorgimento, and focuses his analysis on the political and social causes of the Risorgimento's failure. The book is a 570a42141b
