Maintaining healthy teeth is important for the dental professional and the patient. The goals of preventive dentistry and caries prevention should be based on sound scientific evidence that demonstrates the effectiveness of specific procedures and on the best interests of the patients. The current trend is to focus on the dentist, especially the pediatric dentist, as the main source of disease control. However, it is the use of toothpastes, mouthrinses and other oral hygiene techniques that determines the effectiveness of a program of oral health promotion. The emphasis on caries prevention has produced an increasing variety of products that are claimed to prevent and/or arrest caries. Dentists should therefore be concerned with product development in the area of caries prevention and use it as a basis for formulating recommendations for patients. If too many or incompatible products are recommended, patients will be confused and may become dissatisfied and unwilling to follow recommendations. Advocates of the "disease-preventative" approach of caries prevention seem to have forgotten or have never learned the lessons of disease control and the best caries prevention.. Altshuler, Phys

I had a lot of fun making this dollhouse and have been collecting photos of it and editing them for a while. I've been looking for a custom rabbit for months (see my previous entry where I offered a $1,000 reward for a perfect one!) and when I happened to see these babies at a pet store, I just HAD to buy them. I combined them with a twin-sized crib to make a little girl. She's a classic little girl. (See picture 2). Here she is assembled. I used a white plastic paint to paint the boxes. You can see in the next picture that I have glued her arms to the dollhouse. The little girl's hair is made of a 4x4" sheet of craft paper that I cut and draped on a wire hanger. The doll's eyes were made with painted 1/2" foam circle shapes. I attached her to the house with hot glue and then glued her arms through the windows. The second picture shows that I wrapped her arms and legs with cord from a baby doll to help her look like a real baby. Sunday, July 20, 2014 I don't know if this is totally OCD, but it does seem like I have a thing for gold paint. I've been doing some decorative painting over the past few months, but I started to get bored doing small decals. I wanted to get more creative 3e33713323
