The present invention relates to a structure of an information processing apparatus including a storage device, a medium, and a control method of the apparatus, and, more particularly, to a structure of an information processing apparatus using a storage device having an address input/output function, and a method of controlling the apparatus. In general, an apparatus, such as a digital camera, stores therein data input from an external apparatus, such as a scanner and a camera. When the apparatus is in a state in which input of data is possible, it outputs data upon performing appropriate processing. However, in the case where a device or software for storing data in the apparatus is defective, the apparatus may fail to store data upon performing appropriate processing. In order to prevent such a failure, it is desired to adequately judge whether the apparatus is in a state in which input of data is possible or not. For this purpose, JP-A-2003-222138 discloses a technique for discriminating whether or not an external apparatus, such as a scanner, is in a state in which data can be input. More specifically, the invention disclosed in this document is provided with a CPU for performing data input processing on the scanner, and discriminates whether or not the scanner is in a state in which the scanner is able to input data or not by executing a predetermined process in the case where the scanner is in a state in which input of data is possible. Further, JP-A-2002-247158 and JP-A-2004-149368 disclose a technique for distinguishing, with the use of an SD card as a storage medium, between a state in which data can be stored in the SD card and a state in which the SD card cannot be used because of a defect, thereby preventing, in the case where an apparatus equipped with the SD card uses the SD card, failure of storing data in the apparatus. The invention disclosed in these documents is provided with a CPU for judging whether or not data can be stored in a storage medium. More specifically, in the case where input of data to the storage medium is possible, the CPU performs storage control by reading out data which has been stored in the storage medium. In the case where data cannot be stored in the storage medium, the storage control is performed by reading out a predetermined management table stored in the storage medium. In the case where an apparatus equipped with an SD card as a storage medium employs

Why get yourself to a psychiatrist if you're not sure if you're clinically depressed? The possible consequences of not getting help, even when you're feeling really down, are devastating. Post Pregnancy Depression (PPD) is a normal and expected postpartum experience. It's not like a pregnancy that pops you into a week long depression — that kind of experience is unusual. But it's the kind of normal experience that can go away on its own (hopefully!) or be diagnosed and treated. If you're feeling down, find a way to talk to a doctor about it! Possible Consequences of Not Seeking Help I read a pretty discouraging article recently that listed the possible consequences of not seeking help with Post Pregnancy Depression. I can't remember exactly what the article said, but it went something like this: Forget about your baby: If you are not diagnosed with a postpartum depression or PPD, your baby will not be able to reach out 3e33713323
