FireLite [Updated-2022]

Most Recent Reviews: The software has two windows: The main window displays information about the current scan and a window with the list of the files being scanned. The latter can be kept open at all times and works like a sort of task list. In the main window you can find a checkbox to exclude the current sub-folder from the scan. The software is light on resources and has a small memory footprint, so it can be used on pretty much any machine without having to worry about slow performance. The ability to exclude folders in the scan process is useful, but FireLite fails to indicate which files are not selected to be analyzed. It could have added this information in the list of found files, as this is a very important feature for novice users, who might want to remove the files they don't need from the scanned results. FireLite can scan various files that are listed in the application main window, but it cannot detect arbitrary files. The support for files of different types (AVI, MP3, MP4, JPEG, PDF, ZIP, RAR, CAB, etc.) makes the program compatible with any file format. As soon as the file extension is detected, its properties are displayed in the main window. These include the file size, its creation date, the estimated value of its MD5 hash, the size of the file's content, and the sort type (plain text, HTML, PDF, Excel, Word, etc.). Any kind of malware can be detected with FireLite and its scan engine can identify the type of threat, its size and the module of the virus which is responsible for spreading. Its detection algorithm has been improved over the last few versions. The latest version (1.1.0.0) of FireLite does a better job in filtering out bogus threats and displaying them in a more user-friendly way. An important function of the application is to exclude one or more files from the scan. But the process is a bit clunky, as the list of files is not displayed in any user-friendly way and you have to select the files one by one. If you exclude a file that is not in your target folder, the application will display a list of all the files in the same folder with the same extension. As soon as you choose one of them, the scan will be run against it and the previously excluded files will reappear. To avoid this behavior, you can create
