Retail spending was lower in December, as spending at drug stores, electronics stores and clothing stores declined. The drop in spending at clothing stores was likely because of the store closings in November, said Matt King, senior retail analyst at Credit Suisse. "It is not surprising that retail sales would post a decline in December," he said. "One thing that's always been a little bit elusive is where consumers are going to spend that money." Nonfarm payrolls increased by a modest 103,000 in December, the Labor Department said Wednesday. The median forecast among economists surveyed by Reuters was a gain of 215,000 jobs. President Donald Trump said the report showed the U.S. economy was doing "tremendously well" under his administration. "Now we're going to cut taxes, and we're going to start putting America first," Trump told reporters. "We're going to be cutting taxes so much that in a couple of years you're going to have more money to spend." Economists expect wages to rise 2.4 percent this year, which would be the largest increase since 2009. The retail sales report "is what we've been looking for" to give more credence to the labor market, said Tom Simons, money market economist at Jefferies. "It's more convincing than the job report," Simons said. "The economy continues to add jobs." Personal spending grew 0.4 percent in November. The data followed a report last week showing the economy grew at a 0.6 percent annual pace in the third quarter, the fastest pace in nearly a decade. Retail sales in December were unchanged compared to November, and sales in December fell 1.9 percent from a year earlier. Excluding autos, gasoline and building materials, sales declined 0.7 percent. Gasoline sales increased 0.7 percent as Americans boosted purchases of sport utility vehicles, trucks and
