The growth of human B-lymphocytes is stimulated by IL-4 in combination with monoclonal anti-mu antibody, suggesting that both cell-bound (via membrane Ia) and soluble components (via soluble IL-4R) of the IL-4 receptor are involved in the IL-4-mediated growth induction. The present study shows that IL-4 induced the proliferation of a sizeable fraction of the human blood lymphocytes in the form of B-lymphocytes which are T-independent for PWM-induced blastogenesis. IL-4 at low doses induces a mono- or bi-modal proliferation curve in the presence of low doses of PWM. At higher doses of IL-4, a plateau is reached. With graded doses of PWM, a two-fold shift is observed towards higher doses of PWM for every 10 fold increase of IL-4 concentration. The effect of IL-4 is blocked by anti-IL-4. IL-4 did not induce B-cell maturation. The effect of IL-4 on B-cells is modulated by high doses of G-CSF which induce a two-fold shift towards higher doses of PWM. G-CSF-treated cells were two-fold less responsive to IL-4.Kanye West To Release The New Mattress For Every Bed In America In 2019 Inevitably, people were wondering when Kanye West would design a new mattress for Americans.
