I am still struggling with AngularJS and I am trying to set up a URL routing/security middleware. The problem is that I have to duplicate the code in 2 places: In app.config and then in the route config. What is the best practice to avoid code duplication in AngularJS? I am using the following router config: angular.module('minervaApp') .config(['$routeProvider', '$locationProvider', '$rootScope', function($routeProvider, $locationProvider, $rootScope) { $routeProvider .when('/minerva/categories', { templateUrl: 'view1.html', controller: 'view1Controller', resolve: { categories: function() { return $rootScope.categories; } } }) .when('/minerva/categories/catlif', { templateUrl: 'view2.html', controller: 'view2Controller', resolve: { categories: function($routeParams) { return $rootScope.categories; } } }); $locationProvider.html5Mode(true); }]); Here is a plunker to illustrate the problem: A: You can load your controllers in your main controller function mainController($route, $rootScope, categories) [ 4bc0debe42
