Henry Hollinshead, PhD, Professor of Anatomy, Mayo Foundation, University of Minnesota; Head of the anatomy section. Member of the American Philosophical Society (1985). He was scientific editor of Anatomy & Philosophy of Science from 1962 until his death in 1994. Since 1970, he has mainly been a member of the Philosophy Department. He was interested in the problems of evolution and the relationship between man and animals, anthropology, morality and ethics, culture, religion, art. He has worked in anthropology, religion, philosophy, anthropology of art, anthroponymy and semiotics, history of philosophy, history of science, and interdisciplinary analysis. He worked as editor of Acta Anthropologica (1978-1982), American Philosophical Monographs (since 1980), Annals of the Association of American Philosophers and Philosophical Review (since 1980). In an interview about Newton's philosophy, he remarked that "Newton is the most interesting philosopher in the world." In Losev's philosophy, the most important issues are: language, the nature of knowledge, the existence of God, the cosmos and the origin of consciousness, language and truth. In essence, his philosophy is a philosophical understanding of the philosophy of Plato. V.P. Florensky generally spoke of Losev as one of the "Christian philosophers" along with Plato and Aristotle. He is closest to Origen (although he was not), the Neoplatonist Porphyry, St. Augustine. The main characteristic of Losev's philosophy is metaphysicality. Losev believes that he is not only the creator himself, but also the "gravedigger" of the Platonic system and is the last to denounce the sophists, but he himself does not agree with the sophists themselves. To date, in Losev's philosophy, the outlines of the stages have been precisely defined for themselves, during which Losev's philosophy develops new forms of synthesis, and in subsequent ones returns to the discoveries and developments of its predecessors. Among his students at the Faculty of Philosophy of Moscow State University there are such famous philosophers as O. V. Freidenberg, L. S. Vygotsky, L.G. Bogdanov and others. He wrote about 30 monographs, including: "Darwinism as dialectics, or
