Wincc V11 SP2 x32 x64.Q: fprintf function writes string with null characters to the string instead of with correct ones In a test program, I am trying to write a string to the screen using fprintf. The string which I am writing is of type string. But instead of printing the string with the string's characters written correctly, it prints it with some NULL characters(hex: 0x00). I have no idea why it is behaving like this. I am using MS Visual Studio 2012 under Windows 8. Here's the snippet of my code: if((i%2)==0) { fprintf(tout_handle,"%s",str); str=""; } I am adding the str after my if check, as my program is a binary tree, hence it is having a 0 as its root and it is printing the same on the screen. A: printf("%s", str); You cannot directly print the contents of a string. You should use the above function instead. [Recurrent acute spinal subarachnoid hemorrhage. A case report]. Spinal subarachnoid hemorrhage (SAH) is an infrequent entity that can produce severe, progressive, and irreversible complications that occur in the young patient. Its etiology is often unknown. The diagnosis is difficult, and the clinical picture is atypical with few characteristic symptoms. The neurological symptomatology is usually masked by the effect of anesthetic drugs. Early diagnosis is possible only by lumbar puncture. Treatment is based on complete surgical removal of the hematoma. We describe a case of a patient who developed four recurrences of spinal SAH at the same level after the previous surgery. In all cases we present the clinical syndrome, the neuroimaging studies that were studied, the treatment, and the outcome.Breaking News Police: Protester At Tim Horton's Causes Bee Stings A worker at a Tim Hortons in Mississauga, Ont. says he was stung by a wild bee during a protest this morning.
