Virtually every event which needs to be coordinated has its own band. Players of wind, string and percussion instruments can be found everywhere. People of all ages and walks of life listen to music. However, there is a need for devices which allow a person to listen to music without any other people's hearing. Carrying music with one to listen to music in public is not practical and takes up a large amount of space. Furthermore, there is a need for devices which allow a person to listen to music in a very inexpensive and compact manner. Share this article As the summer progresses, a closer examination of how far 10 of the 18 teams can improve their chances of succeeding in 2013 reveals that seven of the most improved teams (Belgium, Greece, Ireland, Germany, Mexico, Poland and Romania) probably aren't going to find themselves in the top half of the world rankings, while the other three teams (Japan, South Korea and Ukraine) should improve enough to join the top eight-ranked teams by the end of the year. As teams become better, countries become stronger, and after the 2013 Rugby World Cup the pecking order is likely to shift. Here are the 10 teams most likely to excel in 2013: 1) Belgium Over the past two seasons of the European Nations Cup, Belgium has consistently made the semifinals of the Rugby World Cup, but in the context of the 12-team event, the 2011-12 season was its best ever. With the biggest challenge likely to come from next year's Six Nations champions, Wales, the Belgians need to become an even better team, and they probably have the tools to do that. With Liza Burgess and Laura Russell leading the way, the back line is still among the best
