Biography He was the second son of Count Godfrey III of Looz and Hildegarde de Mandeville (daughter of Aimar V, Count of Verdun). As of July 1131, he was the count of Looz, where he settled, with jurisdiction over Ardennes (Ardennes and Veldre) and Overijssel (Oberijssel and Opel). He was on a pilgrimage to Rome between 1130 and 1131, where he met Eleanor of Aquitaine, who was on a similar pilgrimage. Because of this, he was welcomed in Aquitaine. Eleanor and Henry II, Count of Champagne, became close. In 1140, he participated in the Touraine Crusade. Henry IV and Eleanor had two children. She supported this marriage even though it was often divided by the pope. Pope Innocent II even placed a ban on the marriage in 1140. He participated in the Second Crusade, where he was captured in Damietta in 1147. In 1165, the papal legates were placed in the county of Looz, after the Treaty of Bourges. Although Henry was a great lord, he faced problems with other barons, like his brother Guy, who was a younger brother of the previous Count of Looz, Guy III. Guy played a role in the Wars of Succession in the Holy Roman Empire. Later in his life, in 1170, Henry IV received the fief of Westvleteren, together with the County of Flanders (died 1222), from his niece Baldwin II, Count of Flanders.
