Former acting Attorney General Matt Whitaker on Monday took the fifth floor of his new DC office building with his son, who has autism. But as far as he's concerned, he was the first official in the building — and as far as he's concerned, the whole building is his. "I've been here since January," Whitaker, a frequent talking head for Fox News, said at an opening ceremony. "I don't know about you, but I have a very low noise tolerance." And if someone complains, he's not here to play. "Let me give you an example," he said. "There was an old lady that wasn't happy that she couldn't get in." Four of Whitaker's top aides — including the director of his office, Barbara Miller McQuade, and Michael Engel, a top manager in the office — were allowed to start last week, despite not being on the Justice Department's private list of eligible appointees. Two days later, Justice sent a letter notifying Whitaker that McQuade and Engel were ineligible to join his team. "While [McQuade and Engel] have senior status, they are not eligible for official or 'special' status in any component, division, or office of the Department of Justice," the Justice Department told Whitaker in the letter. "No further action is needed from your side, in order to ensure they are not considered for employment in any component, division, or office of the Department of Justice." It's unclear what prompted the Justice Department to reconsider the situation.
