In "HyperMotion Technology," players now move naturally and fluidly, adapting to situations on the pitch and on the ball. On-ball AI gives every footballer skills and intelligent goal-scoring tactics, including a new Defensive Touch Control system that enables the A.I. to read the situation. With this new Defensive Touch Control, the player's position on the field and the defender's position are factored into the AI's decision making. The defender's body position affects how and where the AI will make interceptions and passes. When the A.I. thinks it is being tracked, it will "retake the ball" and the player can defend the territory or attack the space the A.I. has vacated. The more you're tracked, the less space the defender can use for an advantage. The system even offers intelligent hints for players to successfully dribble past opponents and penetrate their defenses. "We've also added to our Player Impact Engine, our centerpiece football creation engine, to enable players and A.I. to move more naturally and play more naturally when facing off against one another," said David Rutter, Manager, FIFA Creative. "We've also introduced completely new challenges for our A.I. team to solve, so that once a player has got the ball, the game will put in more pressure on them to decide on their next play, adding a greater sense of dynamism to the match." On-the-ball AI is combined with a new AI Behaviour Engine that enables smarter game engine A.I. to take on the A.I. rival. This offers the greater advantage of an intelligent opponent on the pitch to all players on the pitch as well as the spectators watching. On-pitch A.I. is enabled through the AI Behaviour Engine. The AI Behaviour Engine takes care of the A.I. rival's physical skills, behavior, anticipation and intelligence. Players like Ronaldo and Ibrahimovic can make more of their strength and presence on the pitch. Real-life physics model, 3D physics, match engine and movement and timing system make on-the-pitch play more realistic, engaging and fun. For the first time, players can use "Knowledge Cards" to learn and earn the tricks and techniques of their opposition. Players are also offered the realistic opportunity to display
