6. 10. Continue working in the Layers palette by dragging the Retouch layer from step five to the bottom of the stacking order. Leave the Opacity slider at 0 and set the Blending Mode to Overlay (Figure 9-11). The image should now look somewhat similar to Figure 9-10, with a large number of overlying paint strokes. Figure 9-10: Drag the layer with the paint strokes from step five to the bottom of the stacking order. Figure 9-11: In the Layers palette, change the Blending Mode to Overlay and drag the paint strokes layer down to the bottom of the stacking order. The amount of time it takes to retouch an image increases in proportion to the number of layers created. Photoshop was not designed for quick work, and the layer-based editing system can be a drag when layers are stacked.

4. Clean Up the Retouch Layer A good retouching starts with solid foundation. Color areas should be removed, and the contour of the face should be refined. The image below still has some flaws — for example, the eyes are out of focus and only the nose is partially completed.

5. Layer masking can take a little time, but the time saved is more than made up for by its simplicity. When you're done with the retouch layer, simply turn on the layer mask by selecting it from the Layers palette. Double-click the layer mask thumbnail for the Retouch layer. The layer mask automatically opens in its own window, so flip to the Mask panel. You'll see the same image as Figure 9-12. The goal of this step is to clean up the retouch layer to remove any unwanted areas. Figure 9-12: Use a layer mask to remove areas that are unneeded.

6. Click the Quick Selection tool and select the white areas from Step 4. The white areas are deleted, and you see the image below in Figure 9-13. Figure 9-13: Work with the mask to remove unwanted areas on the face.

7. Control-click (Windows) or right-click (Mac OS) and choose Remove To Create a New Layer (Mac) or Clone Layer (Windows) to duplicate the Retouch layer. Name the new layer something more specific than the original Retouch layer, such as Face.

8. Switch
