Depending on how or where you're scanning you might be able to download and run an older, freely available version of Reader

(which is probably what you'll see on the web if you search for it). If you can't, you could try downloading this, but I don't know how well it works. I haven't tested it myself. Q: How to correctly test a React component with array of objects I am having some trouble with my React test. I am writing tests for a component that will present a list of fetched items. I have two tests that are failing. I believe it may be to do with the way I am passing the props and trying to access them. My component looks like this: const Example = ({ name, items }) => { return (595f342e71
