In real life, these movements play out over the course of a one-hour game, with the players constantly moving in all directions; it's an incredibly strenuous and challenging workout for the players, which combined with impacts, contact and collisions, makes for a very realistic look. FIFA 20 introduced a brand-new running engine that used a combination of CPU and physics-based optimization to provide unparalleled visual fidelity and speed. This allowed the player models to move through surfaces, dodge, intercept, and exploit any space all while realistically reacting to movement. We took this and used it to map out a system where the teams and players are able to move at incredible speeds.
