The influence of redox agents on the properties of biocompatible poly(2-hydroxyethyl methacrylate) (p(HEMA))-based films was investigated. The grafting of poly(6-bromohexyl thiol), poly(3-mercaptopropyl methacrylate) and poly(N-isopropylacrylamide) onto p(HEMA) films was controlled by addition of the reduced species. Antimicrobial activities of the grafted films were evaluated against selected gram-positive and -negative bacteria and fungi, using agar diffusion tests and mass spectrometry analysis of radicals. The amounts of radicals released from grafted polymers were evaluated by electron paramagnetic resonance (EPR) spectroscopy. The results obtained in this study showed that a significant release of free radicals from grafted films occurred at physiological conditions (pH 7.4, 37 degrees C). Furthermore, the antimicrobial activities of the grafted films were strongly dependent on the nature of the redox-active groups. Thus, p(HEMA) films grafted with polymers bearing thiol and hydroperoxyl groups were the most effective in reducing and killing the bacterial and fungal species tested. I Love You by Hannah Benjamin is another entry in her series where Hannah asks authors to write about a time when they lost themselves in love.
