All tools can be found in both the RGB and CMYK toolbars. If you select one of the toolbars, you can use the "Use Tool" option to change which one is the active one. For the most part, the tools are identical between the RGB and CMYK versions. The main tools are Edit, Select, Color, and Paths. water to a blender or food processor. For a smoothie, add ice, but if you want to separate the pulp from the juice, leave it in the blender for a few minutes until the mixture becomes a thick sludge. Pour into a jug and drink immediately, or freeze in a plastic container. My children have been drinking it since they were one year old. They don't finish a bottle. I have two children and haven't had a problem with them spilling juice on the floor yet. Is there something wrong with my children and I am not realizing it? When I bought my daughter a juice box for breakfast and take the juice box out and pour it down the toilet or in the sink, my daughter just says "ouch". There is no room left in the juice box because all the juice has been used. How do I get rid of the rest of the juice? Ads by Google Comments, questions and tips Comments (5) dianel 14/10/2016 I have used the juicing machine to make fruit and veg juices since I was pregnant with my first, now almost 2 years old. She still loves these juices and I have not had an issue with them spilling. I have never had an issue with the juice leaving a trail of liquid on the floor and they always end up in the fridge or the sink and never leak out. I would just use less water than that to the blend all vegetables together, because they tend to get really diluted in the process. I've made a recipe for vegetable juice before when we were out of carrot juice! There's quite a lot of water in it, but it makes quite a tasty drink and was pretty easy to do. I'm definitely going to make this for my kids as it's a great way of adding in their veg. The bit of water you use to blend your fruit and veg is usually stored in the fridge. My kids store any remaining juice in a cup or two in the fridge when it is finished - they think it lasts longer! Ads by Google Comments
