The effort was put together by Julian Thomas, a Head of Motion Capture and Simulation at EA Sports, and supervised by Dominic Poleon, a co-founder of Tembo Studios and creator of the highly acclaimed (and sold out) Running Man motion capture suit. Motion Capture Technology in Video Stance and Flexibility One of the key focuses of HyperMotion is stability. In traditional console gaming, there is a disconnect between players and the controller. By using motion capture, we can get the player closer to the controller. To achieve this, we needed to improve our motion capture system – particularly in regards to stability. Imagine you are playing a football match and you are thinking about bending your leg. In traditional football, you would be thinking about bending your leg in the air. However, with motion capture in FIFA, we are monitoring your movements and reacting to your player automatically. We can predict what you are going to do before you do it, so your movements will be very natural and you are reacting to what you are seeing. So we wanted to be able to get your foot to bend and this is where the stability of the system really showed itself. We can do this by having the player move quickly and freely without fear of instability. Stability in motion capture is the key to playing a more realistic game, but it's also about flexibility, too. Many people will play FIFA through a controller. In traditional football, you and the ball are the main focus. The ball is very central. The central hub is the player. This works in the game because you are controlling the movement of your player and everyone else – the ball moves naturally. But this doesn't work in FIFA. You cannot control the ball very much. Your player controls it, but the ball isn't really central to the game. The motion capture created a new way of controlling the player and the ball – it's not an after-thought. This is why we need flexibility – we need to be able to change the controls on the fly. We have developed a system called Motion Studio that allows us to change the controls on the fly. In FIFA, you want to be able to control the game easily. If you are playing on a normal football field, you want to be able to move naturally. However, if you want to play FIFA in a stadium you want to be able to play with the controller, and if you

What's new in Fifa 22:

- New kits to recreate more options and chemistry
- New player model improvements; modifying a player's shape to its attributes is now easier than ever. The more FIFA parts a player has, the better proportion it will be in the new player model. Also, new ways for you to decide on the rights and wrongs of a player's actions by adjusting player attributes. For example, the duration of player layoffs, and the reduction in the amount of possession that a player can still have when they are out of the game.
- Create a more realistic, physical performance than ever with Tempo. A new animation engine makes it possible to adapt to the changing dynamics of the game. Move the ball as you need, run, defend, create chances, and score the winner. In Tempo, every player's movement happens just once, instead of regularly, every 10 or 12 frames. Game dynamics are processed more quickly and controls are more responsive. This delivers a more polished, smooth FIFA gameplay experience.

The next question is about challenge. I can see that FIFA 22 contains even more challenges as well.

- More new licensed settings, including La Liga and the German Bundesliga.
- New kits, jerseys and emblems, with clothing for the players to more realistically represent their clubs.
- New stadiums, with a new kind of design in the stadiums, as well as new animations and crowd noises.
- New gameplay experience, which makes the controls more responsive, thanks to the new animation engine that adapts to the player's game dynamics and new contextual animation.

Aiatants are helpers in real life football that help your team by analyzing the game situation, forecasting players, and suggesting tactics. They are now available in FIFA 22, and offer a much more strategic approach to gameplay. What does it mean to “play as you are?” What does it mean to “play as you are?” At the core of what it means to “play as you are” is the use of real players. For FIFA to truly "play as you are" you need to play as real players - not players with a pre-programmed playbook that mimic real-life behaviour. More accurate real life players help to deliver the most authentic experience in the gaming world. Why does “play as you are” affect the outcome of a match?
