The Blue Mountains are the Great Dividing Range. A study by the Australian Geographic Property Information Council (AGPIC), released last week, found that in the 20 years to 2013, the area has grown by 11,400 hectares — an area bigger than Dunsborough — to 88,560 hectares. The “Blue Mountains” stretch from the Victoria border to the Adelaide border and from Yuraygir in the south to Woodend in the north. The report said this increase was driven by population growth, and was not the result of urbanisation. Not surprisingly, the population growth is strongest around the metropolitan area. In terms of property growth, the greatest value has been in the south-west (from Gundawurra to Woodend) with 6,769 hectares. Other major growth areas are Warragul-Yallagong-Penola-Hewitt, Tamworth-Blackall-Loddon Wimmera, Mininera-Menindee and Meekatharra-Marian. As far as market size, the report says “the Blue Mountains are one of the fastest-growing areas in Victoria, as it is one of the most sought after locations for residential, tourism and agricultural development.” Last year, the Blue Mountains Council said it had received 15,000 planning applications for new developments. The Council said it had also received 11,000 renewable energy applications, as well as 5 d0c515b9f4
