Characterization of highly purified Chlamydomonas reinhardtii NADH ubiquinone oxidoreductase complex I for structural and biophysical studies. Here we report a procedure to obtain high-purity (> 95%) covalent dimeric complexes I from Chlamydomonas reinhardtii, the first plant respiratory complex solubilized in high yield and with high (> 90%) purity by a simple procedure based on a triton X-100/n-dodecyl- β -D-maltopyranoside (DDM) solution extraction method. This procedure is fast, less time consuming, yields highly pure complexes, and also allows other purification steps like gradient sucrose density centrifugation. In addition, isolated complexes can be stored at -80°C for long periods and washed twice without loss of functional activity and purity. The detergent-solubilized complexes maintain several functional features of the bioenergetic ultrastructure complex-specific, as they can be fully or partially reconstituted with respect to activities and fluorescence. The observed high stability of solubilized complexes further allowed for the preparation of N-ethylmaleimide (NEM)-treated samples for UV-visible spectroscopy and biophysical techniques such as circular dichroism, fluorescence and resonance light scattering. We found that NEM modifies the flavin absorption spectrum, abolishes the differences in stability between the subsites QI and QII, and changes the tryptophan fluorescence emission maximum for the apoprotein and 1.2 times higher than that of the FMN moiety in the holoprotein.

Q: How does the '.' (period) work in the first argument of main's parameter list? I was reading through a Java tutorial the other day, and I came across something I didn't understand: The dollar-sign operator (.) can be used in the first argument to the main(String[]) method-invocation-form to obtain the string that is part of the string[] array parameter. As a result, the parameter-list section of a method can appear where a variable-declaration-section might otherwise be expected. The idea of the tutorial I was reading is to explain the difference between constructor and parameter-list parameters in Java. The example they give is:

class TestClass { TestClass(String a, int b)
