Mtukudzi, Oliver Tuku Oliver Mtukudzi is a Zimbabwean singer. He was born in Vicky Falls in the Chingwizana District of the Midlands Province, about 14 km from Saizarbuko Village. His early years were spent in a mission in Bulawayo, where he received some music lessons. In 1975 he made his first recordings as vocalist and producer with a group called The Showband. Mtukudzi and The Showband won the first prize at the Afrika Bambaataa & Soulsonic Force concert held in the Zimbabwe National Youth Movement's headquarters in Harare. They also won an award at a music festival in Bulawayo. After the band performed on one of the stations on the 1983 Springbok tour, Ghetts called to invite Mtukudzi and The Showband to join his band. Thus, he joined the band, which featured musicians from Zimbabwe and South Africa, and was called Junior Ghetto. He sang lead vocals and played keyboards, and his musical work was the initial motivation for the name Junior Ghetto. In 1983 he married Busi who was 17. They had five children; Binty, Hilda, Dona, Rina and Blesa. In the early 1990s, Mtukudzi became more vocal about his opposition to Robert Mugabe and the Zimbabwean government, which included denouncing the government for refusing to accept a Ghanian musician from South Africa. Around the same time, there was a series of battles between local and foreign groups which included the Zimbabwean military and the ZANLA. In the wake of the wars, many Zimbabwean musicians left the country. Mtukudzi himself changed his name to Oliver. He continued to record albums for Mango Records. He organised and recorded a number of benefit concerts, including a sold-out concert at a Bulawayo restaurant
