This page aims to give a quick intro to the usability of Photoshop Elements 14, not to compare its usability to Photoshop. The comparison could get very complicated very quickly, so I will not get into that at all. Let's start with some important settings in Photoshop Elements! Original Image Size You can switch the application to "Original Size" by pressing the key F11. The app will start at its default size and then crop your photo by default. Using this setting you can crop a photo to any size you want. You can change the size of the window by double-clicking anywhere on the screen.

Note: using the original size is useful if you want to make corrections to your photo. Contrast, Brightness, Saturation, Hue The next screen shows you the various settings of your photo. Each photo has the same interface and each setting can be switched to "View" by clicking on the box. The feature I use most often is the Contrast setting. This setting decreases the difference between bright and dark pixels. The next screen is the Brightness setting which increases or decreases the contrast of bright and dark parts of your photo. If you open this screen, then the bright part of your photo will get darker and the dark part will become brighter. If you click on the box under Brightness, the color wheel will show you how much brighter or darker the photo is. The Saturation setting is useful if you want to make the photo look like a photograph. A low saturation is more like an image in the newspaper. You can see this best with a rainbow filter, which you can select using the button on the bottom right of the screen. The Hue setting is useful if you want to make the image look like a cartoon. Because you can only choose two colors from a set of 8 colors, you can make the image look like a magazine. If you use the "View" button, you will see that the photo will look like a 2D animated image. The next screen is the Hue/Saturation setting. Here you can choose from 3 settings, either "View" or "Curves" or "Adjust". The first screen is used to apply more changes in one setting. The "View" option is useful to watch the effect of each setting. If you click on the button next to Hue/Saturation, then you will open the Curves dialog where you can

While many of us are taking a well-deserved break from our books and our computers, others — including the creators and editors of some of the internet's most popular websites — are hard at work trying to find just the right tweet to bring on the next Trump scandal. Over the weekend, for instance, it seemed like most of the internet was making the case that Donald Trump Sr. did not actually put those infamous "FAKE NEWS!"

chyron stickers on page two of the 1989 Forbes issue listing Donald's estimated $200 million-plus net worth. (That's right, the disputed stickers, pictured below, ran atop the "billionaires" portion of the magazine's cover.) As noted by a Daily Dot report from early Monday, the week prior to the 1989 Forbes publishing deadline, Donald's father — the man who's officially credited with starting the Trump media empire — did indeed hire an advertising company to design sticker template ads for six

Donald Trump-branded casinos, as well as a miniature version to be used on the pockets of the coats hung up outside the Trump Tower home of Trump Sr. That tidbit alone is interesting, but it gets even more amusing when you consider that, during a period of time when Trump was winning the New York property owner's primary, Trump Sr.'s campaign was reportedly seeking funds from Trump's father so he could put together a "special ad" featuring Donald's own byline "verbatim and in his own words."

Take a look at the ads from the Deschutes Plaza Casino, the Trump Castle Hotel, Trump's Casino at Atlantic City, and Trump's Castle Casino, which showcase Trump and his voice as the highlighted text of the ads — with the 1987 Teen People cover photoshopped in as a sort of style guide to inform the public what the ads looked like when they were originally published. (The image at the top of this post is the product of a fun, anonymous Photoshop experiment of our own.) According to the photograph in the Trump file at the New York Times, the ad called for Trump to be photographed "verbatim." There's even a coffee cup sitting on his desk. His name is even given as "Donald Trump." But most interestingly, these ads are written by a five-year-old girl named Olivia Fordham. In a long interview with the New York Times, Olivia explained that she wrote the piece at the behest of her father, Trump Sr., who told her that he wanted the

Q: How many combinations of mineCraft:survival_mode? I have like 2 button in mineCraft, I'm developing a game with mineCraft:survival_mode and i want to use this 2 button. How many combinations are there for a game when you have 2 buttons or 64? A: So you have multiple modes of survival. Each mode has 4/8 states. So $4/8 * 4/8 = 16$. The game itself has 8 states. This means it would be 16 states for each type of survival mode + the main game. Therefore,
