If you are running a Windows 7 computer and you can't access an older PC, or don't have access to a supported computer, you can install an application to allow you to access a remote computer from the remote computer itself. How to create a remote desktop connection in Windows 7 Once you have a remote desktop connection set up, you can use it to access resources on the remote computer, run programs, do your work, whatever you need to do. To create a remote desktop connection, you need two computers. You need one computer to be able to access a remote computer, and you need to set up the remote computer to allow remote access. Here's how. If the remote computer has the Windows Remote Desktop Connection installed, the remote access is already enabled. Make sure Remote Desktop is on for the computer that will be connected to the remote computer. This is usually the computer that you want to connect to the remote computer. On the remote computer, open the Control Panel and open the System and Security section of the Control Panel. Click on System, and then click on Sharing and Remote Access, and then click on the Remote Desktop section. Make sure the checkbox is on the Allow users to connect remotely, and then click on the Apply button. Enter your credentials for accessing the remote computer in the Remote username and Password boxes.
