Q: ASP.NET Core 2.1 how to use database First or Migrations First I have ASP.NET Core 2.1, I don't want to use the database First or Migrations First. I only want to use code first approach. Currently, I am working on an ASP.NET Core 2.1 project, I used to follow Migrations first approach as this is not a web application. I always encountered problems while updating the migration files. So, I am not so sure about this approach. Please advise. A: From what I understand, from your question, you don't want to use Migrations because you're using an "old" application. You are asking about code first approach because "currently, I am working on an ASP.NET Core 2.1 project". The SQL server database approach is actually a plugin of ASP.NET Core that allows you to create and work on your database. Code-first approach is used when we start building our applications. With it, you generate the entire database schema and you can choose to use migrations as well. Migrations first approach is a way of automatically generating your database schema based on the Entity Framework migrations (that were previously generated). You could have a more up to date database schema in a short amount of time and you are free from using migrations. Of course, when we decide to change our database schema, we could always use the Migrations approach. Try to use the Entity Framework to work with your database by creating entities, and saving your information. It also requires you to work with the ApplicationDbContext. You may use it as a class file, in a separate file. BioWare's Star Wars: The Old Republic is second only to the Call of Duty franchise for global entertainment market revenue, according to a new report by market research firm Newzoo. According to a report in GamesIndustry.biz, BioWare's Star Wars: The Old Republic has banked US$1.6 billion (AU$1.7 billion) since its release last March. That's a little more than Call of Duty: Black Ops II. The report estimates BioWare's revenue from online games, including Star Wars: The Old Republic, was nearly $1.6 billion (AU$1.8 billion), which is more than the global revenues of Resident Evil 5, Call of Duty: Black Ops II and Blizzard's World of Warcraft. BioWare's revenues from its social gaming, according to the report, were only $120 million, which is half the revenue of League of Legends and three times smaller than that of World of Warcraft. BioWare's BioWare CEO Greg Zeschuk said back in March that BioWare was looking to "push the envelope" with Star Wars: The Old Republic, and also released a gameplay video featuring Darth Maul. and thought that thus there cannot be any reason for such an offence. We will therefore rectify the matter by according them not the privilege of conversion but the status of Muslims. Let them remain liars and will gain the benefit due to Islam by a miracle of Allah. The assembly must include you among them, as they have not yet reached this position. They have not been the servants of the sun, nor the witnesses of the moon, nor the witnesses of Allah. As long as they are such, they are outside the protection of Islam, until they have attained their position. Do you not know that the Prophet of Islam came with the guidance and the religion of god? And that he was a mercy to all the worlds? The people of the scripture are not sincere for that one who was truthful in what he has brought, nor in his messenger who it is of which there is no doubt, for those who have a lack of knowledge and if you ask them they would deny it. Can there be a nation that follows a messenger at war with itself? Can there be a nation that finds justification for its cause in a messenger as its god? And what can be more evil than such an interpretation? And what can be more unjust than such
