Alpha 1(I)-proteinase inhibitor is one of the most important inhibitors of the human plasma serine proteinases. Its synthesis is regulated at the translational and post-translational levels. Interaction between the messenger RNA coding for alpha 1(I)-proteinase inhibitor and mRNA-specific factors which are located in the 5'-untranslated region of the mRNA sequence is the critical step which controls the initiation of translation. The binding of alpha 1(I)-proteinase inhibitor mRNA to specific binding proteins in cytosol or in the ER inhibits protein synthesis. Such a regulation by means of specific RNA-protein complexes is probably more complex than was first thought. There are indications that the level of alpha 1(I)-proteinase inhibitor in the cytosol may not only be regulated by post-translational processing of the protein itself but also by a translocation from the ER to the cytosol and may be integrated in a signal transduction cascade. While the exact sequence of the processes is not known, they appear to be crucial for understanding the functions of alpha 1(I)-proteinase inhibitor. FILED 648931e174

Automated.This invention relates to a simulated open burning device and, more particularly, to an apparatus for simulating the open burning of cigarettes or the like. The invention is suitable for use by the youths of our culture who often indulge in open burning. The use of cigarettes in connection with open burning is a popular form of recreational activity. Usually the burning cigarette or cigarette stub is ignited in a cigarette lighter or within a small bowl or cup. If this arrangement is used, the cigarette must be manually replaced after use and, if it is not immediately extinguished, the flames must either be doused or allowed to burn out. However, these simple forms of open burning are undesirable, in part, because they are potentially hazardous. It has been reported that in some areas of the United States, as much as 18% of the population suffers from cigarette related fires. Also, because these fires sometimes require the use of fire extinguishers, the use of cigarettes in connection with open burning has been outlawed in many public areas. As is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 3,930,631, simulated open burning devices may be devised which permit the ignition of a cigarette without permitting the flame to become extinguished. The apparatus shown in that patent comprises a chamber in which a cigarette stub is inserted, a wick, and a fuel supplying apparatus. The wick is manually set alight, once ignited, and the flame burns out. While this device satisfactorily simulates the use of a cigarette in connection with open burning, it is not entirely satisfactory. For example, the device is relatively large and bulky, particularly when compared to a cigarette lighter. Also, when the device is being carried, it is subject to damage, especially in the event that it is accidentally dropped. In addition, the wick is not protected from the elements and, therefore, over a long period of time the wick will become damaged. Accordingly, a need exists for a simulated open burning device which is convenient to use and which satisfactorily simulates the open burning of cigarettes.Recent advances in the use of protein-based nanocarriers as novel therapeutics and vaccines.
