Alt is a text indexer which gives you a way to quickly search and index any sites on the Internet via "Copy" and "Link" function. The software index is structured from the family as part of the computer family and then the root of the family is Alastrie which contains the last version of the computer family. In this root, there is a folder called alt with a text indexer called Alt. Here, a lot of text files are organized according to pre-set filters (e.g. time, subject, category, author and company) and you can also update or delete the files, just like a traditional text indexer. When you create an index, you can choose to add a text file and remove a text file (just like Alt+Alt+Del). You can also "Copy" the index created to another folder using the "Link" function, so you can use Alt+Alt+Del (again) to quickly retrieve the index. Alt also organizes the contents of the index in a special folder called "Dashboard" and you can also get the latest updates of the file by pressing Alt+Alt+1.
