Mycobacterium abscessus subsp. massiliense, an emerging opportunistic pathogen in dermatology: A prospective, multicenter study from a tropical setting. Mycobacterium abscessus subsp. massiliense (MAS) has emerged as an important opportunistic pathogen in recent years, especially in those with cystic fibrosis. Studies regarding MAS infection in dermatology are scarce. To study the clinical and epidemiological characteristics of MAS in a tropical setting. A prospective, multicenter study was conducted at 10 hospitals in a tropical country. All patients with a clinical diagnosis of chronic skin lesions were studied. GeneXpert® or phenotypic tests ( $\geq 1 \mu\text{l}$ -volume) were performed for M. abscessus identification. On the basis of phenotypic identification, MAS-complex strains were further sub-typed with IS1245 analysis. A total of 586 patients with chronic skin lesions were analyzed, of whom 70 (12.2%) had mycobacterial infection. Among them, 35 (50%) were culture positive, including 20 (28.6%) with M. abscessus complex. Among these, 25 (71.4%) were culture positive for MAS. Fluoroquinolone susceptibility was observed in 24 (96%) patients. No severe side effects were observed in any patient. In a tropical setting, MAS-complex was the second most frequent complex isolated after M. fortuitum and caused chronic skin lesions in 57.1% of patients. Infection was observed in 12.2% of patients and was most frequently associated with difficult-to-treat conditions, particularly in cystic fibrosis.
